@Connor Nolan @Cameron Drummond Rey @Nick Evangelatos Auros expressed concerns about the recent loans recalled in the midst of rumors floating around about Celsius: Is this temporary? or a passively indirect way cutting down Auros credit limit? @Brian Strauss @Jerry Ho @Peter Graham @Peter Salyga

They are very concerned - I just got off a quick call with him. They expect: 1) clarification of the rumors; 2) any impact on credit borrowing going forward?

currently we are closing a lot of loans across the board to bring back in house liquidity, this is something that more than likely is going to continue just so we are all aware. Between outflows to the community and falling prices this is just the reality of what we need to do theres no other way to put it, whether explaining internally or externally

Any bad reactions from professional clients / inst borrowers ?

well no one seems happy and with all the fud around us its clear we are closing for liquidity reasons. not much we can do about that, think the message would be we hope this is temporary but its necessary

Do we expect to close all the outstanding loans with Auros? Any left? I can give them a heads-up if the confidence level is high, in case it comes across as surprise we dont want to but if we continue to need to wind down loans we will have to do so. cant promise anything, but after the one we just requested i would think thats all for today unless a major change in mkt (which is possible)

Is there going to be a possibility of refinancing them, or is that completely off the table for now?
